bargains – bills – expenses – depend on – splash out –
make a profit – make ends meet – put down

When I was a student at university, I didn't want to depend on my parents any longer, so I took a part-time job and I learned to be frugal with my money and live with very little. Of course, there were expenses that I had to pay, such as bills, food, and rent, but I learned how to make ends meet by shopping around for bargains, and not buying anything I didn't need.

After graduating, I worked hard as an engineer and earned a decent salary. However, I continued to live frugally and was soon able to put down a deposit on an apartment. Five years later, I had already paid off my mortgage, and the money I was saving each month on accommodation enabled me to set up my own company. It's been hard work, but my business is starting to make a profit. Nowadays, I am certainly not splashing out, but I'm in a better financial position than I ever thought I'd be. Money may not buy happiness, but being careful with it certainly helps.
