It was three o'clock. A man was walking (walk) down a high street in the north of England. He was wearing (wear) a dark suit and carrying a suitcase. His name was Patrick and he had lived (live) away from home for the last twenty years. In fact, he had been (be) in prison. Patrick was feeling totally depressed because everything in his home town had changed (change). The park where he used to play was now a car park. The house where he was born had disappeared (disappear) and in its place, ironically, there was a bank. Patrick decided (decide) to have a cup of coffee in the old snack bar where he used to go with his friends after school but it had become (become) a burger bar. While he was paying (pay) for the coffee, he found (find) an old ticket in his wallet. It was (be) for a pair of shoes he had taken (take) to be repaired the day before the bank robbery 20 years ago. The shoe repairer was an old man then, so Patrick was (be) sure that he must be dead. But when he turned (turn) the corner of the street he couldn't believe his eyes. The shop was still there! And it was the same shoe repairer! He looked (look) about a hundred years old. Patrick was so happy! Patrick told him that he had been living (live) in Australia for the past twenty years and that he had forgotten (forget) to pick up some shoes before he left England. The shoe repairer disappeared (disappear) into the back of the shop. After ten minutes he came back (come). "Were (be) they dark brown, Italian shoes, size 42?" he asked slowly. "Yes!" said Patrick excitedly. "They'll be ready tomorrow afternoon", said the shoe repairer.
